Restorative Justice at Work: Circles of Courageous Conversations

by Mary M. Stump, Circle Member

In May 2020, the killing of George Floyd caused many people in this country to react with deep sorrow, anger, and horror. Our parishioners felt the tremendous anguish and looked for actions of healing and ways to express their need for change. Several meetings among parishioners involved in justice ministries gathered to express ideas to assist. Later that summer, three small groups of Holy Trinity parishioners began to gather on Zoom for Racial Healing Circles in an attempt to verbalize their understanding of, and reaction to, racism in the United States. Under the auspices of the Restorative Justice Committee, Circle Keepers, Ron Castaldi, Frances Kummer, Paul Maco, Bob Stump, and Ellen Touns have provided the structure for ongoing conversations.

One of the first questions posed to the groups was, “Do you believe there is and has been systemic racism in this country?” Using the protocols of a Circle – speak in turn, no cross talk, listen attentively – members responded, spoke of the need for continued education on the subject, and expressed interest in reaching out to Black/Brown members of other faith communities.

Since then, connections have formed with St. Augustine’s Catholic Church and John Wesley AME Zion Church, as some of their members accepted the invitation to join our Circles. There was uncertainty as to whether these outreaches would simply be “dating” or ones that would lead to longer and deeper relationships.

As Circle Keepers facilitated those early outreach sessions, they asked what emotion each member was bringing to the Circle on a particular day. Reactions included: curiosity, excitement, gratitude, optimism, motivation, hope, and open-mindedness.

The Circle that now includes five members of the John Wesley congregation began to consider steps they could take to begin to create racial equality in our DC area and agreed that everyone involved would need to become “comfortable in uncomfortable situations.”

Subsequent conversations have covered such thought-provoking questions as:

- What did you learn about race from your family/community?
- Who were your models for dealing with people of a different race?
  - Do racists hate only one race or any that is different from theirs?
  - How do I respond to someone who is racist in my presence?
  - How do we get our broader faith communities to care about racial healing as essential to our well-being as community?
  - If you feel rage today, how is it different from the rage you felt five years ago?

LIVING OUR MISSION

Fr. Bill Woody, S.J.

“God loves you just the way you are...
but way too much to let you stay that way!”

As we conclude our Easter season and reenter Ordinary Time, we as Church celebrate two great solemnities marking God's desire to be with us: the Solemnity of Pentecost last weekend, and our parish's own patronal feast in Trinity Sunday this weekend. With Pentecost we mark the “birthday of the Church,” the moment when the Spirit of God is poured forth upon the disciples in abundance, instilling a holy boldness and an ability to bear witness to the Risen Lord. One week later we celebrate the Solemnity of the Most Holy Trinity, a revelation of God's very self that speaks to us of God's desire to be known and in relationship with us – Father, Son, and Spirit, inviting us into the great mystery of the Divine life of intimate unity marked by wonderful diversity. This God desires to be known and to be with us – inviting us into relationship and being poured forth in abundance into our hearts.

Opening our hearts and our lives to that love of God can be a truly transformative experience – leading us, much like those early disciples, from spaces of fear or confusion into the freedom of the children of God. The disciples were led forth from an upper room of fear and hiding into a holy boldness where they could bear witness before others – sharing the joys of the Risen Lord, the victory of the love of God, and the invitation to a life transformed by an encounter with God's grace.

God desires to be known and to be loved. God so deeply desires that we be in a relationship, called into communion. And as we come to know God more intimately through this revelation of the Trinity, the Spirit of God is poured forth into our own hearts, much like those early disciples. This Spirit rushes through the locked doors of our own upper rooms, into those spaces of fear and hiding, of shame and confusion. And we, too, are transformed from within! Emboldened and encouraged, we are led forth from those spaces that hold us back.

God seeks us out tirelessly, giving generously and pouring forth in abundance, to meet us and to invite us into that transformative encounter with God's very self. As a spiritual director of mine was fond of reminding us: “God loves you just the way you are...but way too much to let you stay that way!”

We have nothing to fear, nothing to lose, and everything to gain! Opening our hearts to an encounter with the Spirit of God promises a transformative and life-giving encounter – an invitation to set aside past sorrows, shames, and fears, and to begin living that “life abundant” that Jesus promises to us.

Restorative Justice at Work: Circles of Courageous Conversations continued from page 1

- What has the Church done about racial divisions and to support change?

- For what reason, if any, would you be afraid to engage in a discussion on race with a multi-racial group, including some you've never met before?

- Equity or Equality?

That same Circle feels a familial relationship, and as family, has experienced and mourned together the deaths in their midst – one member and the fathers of three others. A December in-person gathering at Holy Trinity's McKenna Hall became a celebration of that connectedness with spontaneous and joyous hugs. The future may bring more similar gatherings for Circle sessions themselves, as well as social events and nascent plans to attend services at each other's Churches.

It is our continuing work to try to process and condemn increasing acts of often fatal violence against Black and Brown communities, especially the recent massacre in Buffalo. Perhaps you are discerning your role as an ally and anti-racist member of our faith community. If the questions and processes of these Racial Healing Circles have led you to consider the possibility of joining conversations about racism, you may get more information by contacting: Bob Stump, rwstump@aol.com or Ron Castaldi, Ron.Castaldi@gmail.com, and for other social justice initiatives, Ashley Klick, Pastoral Associate for Social Justice, aklick@trinity.org. ☪
